

403(b) vs. 457(b)...

What's the difference?

Your employer may offer you the option of contributing both to a 403(b) and a 457(b) plan. Although the plans are very similar, there are a few differences worth noting:

Similarities:

- Both plans were designed for government and non-profit workers.
- The tax advantages for both 403(b) and 457(b) are similar in that all contributions are deducted from your taxable income and interest and investment earnings are tax deferred until withdrawal.
- Age based contribution limits are the same. As a reminder, 2021 limits can be found on our website at www.omni403b.com. Catch-up provisions differ and 457(b) plans do not recognize non-elective contributions.
- If permitted by the plan, both plans may allow for "hardship" (in a 403(b) plan) or "unforeseeable emergency" (in a 457(b) plan) withdrawals. Although these transactions are similar, "unforeseeable emergency" withdrawals have stricter criteria for qualification.

Differences:

- Once you turn age 59 ½ you may withdraw from your 403(b) plan, even if still employed. In a 457(b) plan, however, you cannot withdraw funds without penalty until you are 70 ½ if you are still employed. Disability withdrawals are also not available in a 457(b) plan.
- Once separated from employment, a participant may withdraw from his/her 403(b) or 457(b) plan. Although subject to ordinary federal and state income tax, withdrawing from a 457(b) does not result in additional IRS tax penalty regardless of age. Withdrawing from a 403(b), however, may result in such penalty if done before the age of 59 ½.
